A Keen-O-Phone – Rex – Imperial Chronology

Based on American Record Companies and Producers, 1888–1950
(Allan Sutton; Mainspring Press, 2018)

February 1908 • The Keen-O-Phone Company is organized as a Delaware corporation operating in Philadelphia. It initially markets phonographs capable of playing standard lateral-cut discs, prompting legal action by the Victor Talking Machine Company. The company initially does not produce records.

March 1912 • Keen-O-Phone announces that it is preparing to introduce its own records and has employed Fred Hager “to handle the talent and recording end of the business.”

March 1912 • In a possibly related development, the U.S. Phonograph Company's J. Louis von der Mehden notes in his diary that a disc-cutting machine is being tested in that company's studio by Charles Hibbard. Hibbard is hired as Keen-O-Phone's recording engineer a short time later. Keen-O-Phone's studio is located at 1202 (later, 1209) Walnut Street, in Philadelphia.

April 1912 • Keen-O-Phone sales manager Emil Bauer declares that record production is progressing steadily and a catalog is being prepared. Nothing more is reported concerning record production until the autumn, at which time the company projects an initial release in mid-November. But unspecified problems will delay the records' debut for another year.

April 1913 • Acknowledging that "many things have hindered the progress of this company," Keen-O-Phone finally announces on April 9 that its first records are ready for delivery. They employ the company's own sapphire-ball, vertical-cut masters. Based upon song titles, it appears likely that many of the early releases are 1912 recordings.

August 1913 • The Keen-O-Phone Company is reorganized, with Alexander R. Querns elected to replace Morris Keen as president. Keen and Lyon retain their seats on the board, but their positions are diluted by the addition of five new members.

October 1913 • Charles Hibbard departs Keen-O-Phone to oversee what will be the Phono-Cut studio's final days.

December 1913 • Keen-O-Phone claims excellent holiday-season sales and announces plans to introduce a new line of phonographs in early 1914, but operations stall.

January 1914 • The Rex Talking Machine Corporation is incorporated in Wilmington, Delaware, by Philip Wohlstetter and Paul F. Haessler, with capital stock of $1.2 million. Officers include Wohlstetter (president), H. W. Stoll (treasure), and A. C. Simpson (secretary). Keen-O-Phone's Fred Hager (musical director) and Thomas Kraemer (factory superintendant) are retained by the new company, and Charles Hibbard leaves the faltering Phono-Cut operation to serve as recording engineer.

February 1914 • Rex secures a long-term lease on the Keen-O-Phone Company's plant, equipment, and patents. The company also acquires rights to the Keen-O-Phone masters, probably through Hibbard and Hager, who appear to own them. Rex substitutes its own label for Keen-O-Phone but continues Keen-O-Phone's catalog-numbering series, picking up where Keen-O-Phone left off. Much of the early catalog consists of Keen-O-Phone reissues.

April 1914 • The Pooley Cabinet Company sells the remaining four-thousand Keen-O-Phone machines to Gimbel Brothers' New York department store, which remainderers them for half-price. A former Keen-O-Phone sales representative observes that Keen "failed to realize that "'making' is one thing, and 'creating a market' another...the factory kept turning out these superb instruments with no real market developed."

May 1914 • Rex moves manufacturing equipment from Keen-O-Phone's former Philadelphia plant to Liggett & Myers' vacant tobacco factory on Vandever Avenue in Wilmington, Delaware (the studio will remain in Philadelphia until August 1915, when it is moved to New York). Wohlstetter appears unprepared for the transition, admitting to The Talking Machine World, "at the present time matters are in such a preliminary stage that it is almost impossible to tell the trade what we are planning to do."

January 1915 • The Rex factory is temporarily closed beginning January 26, after creditors file a petition for involuntary bankruptcy with the U.S. District Court in Philadelphia, claiming that the company is insolvent. The largest creditor (Gustave Mayer, who loaned the company $17,5000) is appointed receiver. Phonograph manufacturing is temporarily suspended, but record production continues.

July 1915 • Reorganization of Rex as a Delaware corporation begins after creditors agree to accept Rex stock in lieu of cash. Wohlstetter is retained as president despite his uneven performance thus far, while receiver Mayer serves as secretary and treasurer.

August 1915 • The reorganized Rex Talking Machine Corporation moves its studio to New York and introduces a redesigned Rex label. Many old Keen-O-Phone titles are deleted at this time, while some others are recoupled and assigned new Rex catalog numbers. The company finds a much-needed new revenue stream as a producer of client labels, eventually supplying pressings to Empire, McKinley, Mozart, Playerphone, Rishell, and other regional and mail-order brands.

November 1915 • An unexpected increase in demand for records catches Rex's managers unprepared. The factory reports a backlog of more than 25,000 unfilled record orders ahead of the important holiday buying season.

August 1916 • The Talking Machine World reports that Rex "is doing considerable advertising in the 'movies,' and with good results." However, Rex is struggling financially as it competes for market share with Pathé's superior sapphire-ball discs, which have been rapidly gaining in popularity since their introduction to the American market in late 1914.

October 1916 • A group of Rex's creditors headed by Gustave Mayer (who is still owed $15,300), files a bankruptcy petition on October 9. Paul B. Stevens and Paul F. Haessler are appointed receivers on October 15, with instructions to continue operation of the plant until further notice.

February 1917 • The Rex Talking Machine Corporation is ordered to liquidate its assets, which are offered at a bankruptcy sale on February 2. The purchaser is David J. Reinhardt, representing a group of Rex stockholders. A final meeting of Rex creditors takes place on September 12, 1917, by which time the company has been defunct for six months.

March 1917 • The new owners of Rex's assets leave Wohlstetter and the existing Rex staff in place and quickly resume business as the Imperial Talking Machine Company. The new company is incorporated in Wilmington, Delaware, on March 22, with an initial capitalization of $2 million. Officers include Stevens (president), Wohlstetter (vice-president and general manager), and Haessler (secretary). Gaetano Merola is recruited as musical director, replacing Fred Hager. Charles Hibbard stays on as recording engineer.

May 1917 • The new company launches Imperial as its flagship label. The Talking Machine World's Trade Directory initially lists the company as the manufacturer of both Imperial and Rex records. For a time, new releases appear simultaneously on both labels, but new Rex-label releases decline steadily after August 1917.

November 1917 • The Phonograph reports that Charles Hibbard and Fred Hager are operating their own studio, as the Perma Recording Laboratory. The company's relationship to Imperial is unclear, but its launch might explain why Hager's name had stopped appearing on new Imperial releases several months earlier.

December 1917 • Ultimately, Imperial fares no better than its predecessor, and the company suspends record production in December. The final Imperial recordings, made just prior to the factory closure, are advertised in February 1918.

Early 1918 • The services of Charles Hibbard and Fred Hager are acquired by Otto Heineman in preparation for the launch of his Okeh label. Hager retains possession of the Keen-O-Phone, Rex, and Imperial masters, which are not used by Okeh. Hager later recalls having disposed of them to an unnamed purchaser in the 1930s.

March 1918 • A portion of the Imperial factory equipment is auctioned in March. Wohlstetter announces that he is planning to store the rest as the “nucleus” of a new plant. The factory building is taken over by chemical manufacturer E. I. Du Pont, which converts it to the production of materials for the war effort.

April 1918 • Wohlstetter dies suddenly, on April 3.

1919 – 1921 • Imperial's failure forces at least one of its distributors into bankruptcy and leaves others with a glut of unsold Rex and Imperial merchandise. The company's remaining assets, including the pressing-plant equipment, are sold at public auction on January 15, 1920. Babson Brothers and others are still offering bulk lots of surplus Imperial and Rex records in 1921, for as little as 20¢ per disc.

For a detailed history of these companies, and the many labels they produced, see the author's American Record Companies and Producers, 1888–1950 (Mainspring Press).

Using the Discography

The Keen-O-Phone, Rex, and Imperial files have long-since vanished. Therefore, this discography is a modern reconstruction compiled from first-hand inspection of the original discs, catalogs, supplements, and advance sales lists.

George Blacker began work on this project in the 1960s, with substantial input from other members of the Record Research group (Walter C. Allen, Carl Kendziora, Len Kunstadt, et al.) and, later, from William R. Bryant and his circle of trusted collaborators. Although George had made significant strides in raw data compilation by the time of his death, much remained to be done to put that material into publishable form. That work has now been completed, at least to the extent that any such work is ever truly "complete." The resulting discography, published here for the first time, incorporates significant updates to George's original findings, contributed by an equally expert group of collectors and researchers whose assistance with this as well as other Mainspring Press projects has proven invaluable.

The discography is organized by catalog numbers, beginning with the main 5000 series. Keen-O-Phone's original catalog-number series were continued by Rex (which added several small additional series of its own), and finally by Imperial. The primary-label releases are listed first, in chronological order (Keen-O-Phone > Rex > Imperial), followed by the client-label releases in alphabetical order.

Confirmed release dates are given. Recording dates have not been preserved, and there has been no attempt to extrapolate them from release dates in this work (although development of an approximate recording-date chart is being considered for a future edition), given the dangers inherent in that practice. We know from surviving Victor and Columbia documentation that the average turnaround for this period, from date of recording to date of release, averaged six to eight weeks. However, there were many exceptions to the norm, with the release of some recordings withheld many months or even years at Victor and Columbia, and there is no reason to suspect that the situation was any different at Keen-O-Phone and Rex.

Song titles and composer credits are given in standardized form (i.e., as published and/or registered for copyright), with any significant label-copy deviations from the standard form noted. Minor label-copy deviations from the standard form (insignificant misspellings, differences in punctuation or capitalization, etc.) have been disregarded. A / B side designations are those on the original issues. In some cases, they were reversed on client labels (i.e., a side designated A on the Rex label might be designated B on the label of the corresponding Rishell issue). In all such cases inspected thus far, the original side designation appears in the wax regardless of what the label states.

Artists are listed below the title line, while individual artist label credits (some of which are pseudonymous or vary in other ways) appear following each release. Keen-O-Phone, Rex, and Imperial used artist pseudonyms rather sparingly on their own labels, but employed them more freely on the client labels they produced. For the purposes of this work, professional or stage names, such as Henry Burr, are not considered pseudonyms. Identification of pseudonymous artists, being based upon aural identification (indicated in the discography as a.e.), is necessarily subjective to varying degrees.

The primary labels: Keen-O-Phone (1912–1914), Rex (1914–1918), and Imperial (1917–1918). There are several minor variants of the Keen-O-Phone and Rex designs that are not shown here.

Some Rex-Imperial client labels, most of which used the same catalog numbers as the source issues. A few labels, including Playerphone and some Crescent issues, were simply pasted over the Rex or Imperial originals. Crescent, Mozart, and Rishell turned to other suppliers following Imperial's demise.

Beginning with Rex 5437, new house-band releases generally credit the Imperial rather than the Rex Orchestra or Band, reflecting the transition from the Rex Talking Machine Corporation to the Imperial Talking Machine Company. The change also roughly coincides with the departure of Fred Hager (see "Chronology"), who ceased to receive label credit on new Rex and Imperial releases at approximately this point. Imperial continued to use the Rex label for selected new releases, but with decreasing frequency, through the end of 1917. In addition, many earlier Rex-label releases were carried over into the Imperial catalog and may appear with Imperial labels on late pressings, retaining their original catalog numbers.
