The Victor Discography Series

By John R. Bolig

The advent of this online discography is a continuation of record descriptions that were compiled by me and published in book form by Allan Sutton, the publisher and owner of Mainspring Press.

When undertaking our work, Allan and I were aware of the work started by Ted Fagan and Bill Moran, in which they intended to account for every recording made by the Victor Talking Machine Company. We decided to take on what we believed was a more practical approach, one that best met the needs of record collectors. Simply stated, Fagan and Moran were describing recordings that were not necessarily published; I believed record collectors were interested in records that were actually available. We decided to account for records found in Victor catalogs, ones that were purchased and found in homes after 1901 as 78rpm discs, many of which have become highly sought-after collector's items.

The following Victor discographies by John R. Bolig have been published by Mainspring Press:

- Caruso Records - A History and Discography
- GEMS – The Victor Light Opera Company Discography
- The Victor Black Label Discography – 16000 and 17000 Series
- The Victor Black Label Discography – 18000 and 19000 Series
- The Victor Black Label Discography – 20000 and 21000 Series
- The Victor Black Label Discography – 22000, 23000, 24000, V-38000, V-38500 and V-40000 Series
- The Victor Red Seal Discography – Volume I – Single-sided Series
- The Victor Red Seal Discography – Volume II – Double-sided - to 1930
- The Victor Discography – Green, Blue and Purple Labels
- The Victor Discography – Special Labels, 1928 to 1941
- The Bluebird Discography – Volume I

Allan Sutton announced his retirement in 2016 and informed his readers that Mainspring Press would not be publishing any more books, including some that were in progress. Sam Brylawski and David Seubert, the two leaders of the Discography of American Historical Recordings—a project housed at the University of California, Santa Barbara—had supported and encouraged each of my books and we shared information freely for more than a dozen years. When Sam learned that I no longer had a publisher, he contacted me and offered to put my work online as one of their current projects. We agreed to do so with three conditions:

- We would encourage people to buy Allan Sutton’s remaining inventory of books;
- We would encourage people to make documented amendments to my data;
- The online material could be downloaded and printable in a format that looks very much like the style found in the Mainspring Press volumes.

Scope of Victor Record Production and Preserved Data

Fagan and Moran had an impressive objective, but it was limited. Many of the records issued by the Victor Company were not recorded in the United States, and their description would require research by people all over the world, especially by people who studied the recordings made in Europe by a Victor affiliate that we now refer to as His Master’s Voice (HMV). To make things even more confusing, the Victor Company also had studios in Latin America, and many of those recordings also began to be listed in the standard Victor catalogs.

An enormous amount of data has been preserved in various archives, but unfortunately some data have been lost. Some of the extant data are “second generation” documents and that adds to the mystery surrounding many of the Victor records. For example, when recordings were made by Victor engineers, the descriptions were sent to clerks who typed data into daily ledgers and then created blue-colored index cards (also called blue history cards) that contained basic statistics for recordings that would actually be published. The great majority of documents written by the engineers no longer exist, so we are not certain that various people in the studios participated in some of the recordings. In fact, other than the major artists, we don’t always know who was in the studio.

It is also true that musicians in the studio did not participate in every composition that was recorded. For example, some arrangements did not require various instruments, and there are notes in the ledgers that indicate that musicians were excused early, or were replaced when a second or third take was recorded. Some well-known discographers did considerable research to identify many of the musicians who played for the famous bands and orchestras of the 1930s, and they sometimes made incorrect assumptions that those performers participated in every recording made in sessions by those organizations.

Allan Sutton and I agreed that we would prepare and publish descriptions of Victor records that were not embellished with unproven data. Only those facts that can be seen on the existing ledgers and blue history cards are included in the volumes that we created. I made a few exceptions. In one recording, a performer mentions the name of somebody else on the record. In another instance, a friend of mine advised me that Louis Armstrong mentioned playing his trumpet on a Jimmy Rodgers record, and he provided me with a copy of the videotape on which Armstrong described that recording.

I was impressed by the research done by Don Rayno, who did an outstanding job of documenting recordings made by Paul Whiteman in his biography Paul Whiteman, Pioneer in American Music – Volume I (Scarecrow Press, 2003). Victor had released a memorial album in honor of Bix Beiderbecke (a member of Whiteman's orchestra from 1928 to 1930) and despite the absence of his name in the Victor ledgers, Rayno's work convinced me to list Beiderbecke as a performer on each record in that album.

The publication of discographies with undocumented speculative information is simply unacceptable to me. Collectors should not buy a record because a famous trumpet player is rumored to have participated on a recording. There are instances where two or three relatively famous discographers have made inferences about who may have participated in many Victor recordings, yet I could not find proof that those people were within 100 miles of a recording studio on many of the recording dates.

Common sense dictates that Paul Whiteman was the conductor of recordings made by his orchestra. He was not always present, and the fact is that quite a few well-known bands and orchestras were conducted by members of the band or by Victor employees. The great John Philip Sousa's band made dozens of Victor records conducted by Arthur Pryor and others but never by Sousa. When making the lists of records in this discography, I only list the name of the conductor if his or her name was actually printed in the daily journals. The distinction here is important. If I was not 100% sure that an individual was in the studio, I do not list that person's name.

Labels have always been a problem. In the early years, Victor record labels contained many errors. By the 1930s, the company had proofreaders who spotted and corrected errors, sometimes after a few hundred copies had been sold. The company, and almost every company in the world, had variations on Tchaikovsky's name. Waltzes were listed as Fox trots, and by the way, "Fox" was a man's name and I am adamant that it should be spelled with a capital letter. (We are not certain that an entertainer named Harry Fox actually devised that form of dance, but he did popularize it.) So, I can only suggest that I made the very best effort to accurately describe the title of any selection that I listed, and some of the decisions may not agree with those listed on labels. Among other things, I did not list lyricists on orchestral records.

The identification of lyricists and composers was difficult. Victor documents and record labels usually list last names and do not distinguish between poets and composers. I usually listed lyricists first and composers last for each of the records that are described, but that is often misleading because some of those people collaborated on the entire composition. Once in a while I would come across a song attributed to people known as lyricists, and I would devote too much time trying to prove that somebody else must have written the tune. It was always a joy to come across songs written by Cole Porter or Irving Berlin because they almost always wrote the words and the music for their songs and no research was necessary.

Pseudonyms are another problem. I cannot imagine why anybody would write a great song and want to be listed under another name, but many entertainers Anglicized their names in the "good old days" in order to be more acceptable to the ticket-buying public. I made a half-hearted effort to identify quite a few of the more significant people who were known by more than one name, or by a nickname.

All of the above comments fall into the category of delimitations for this type of research. I have to confess that I often sense that a performer is probably included on a recording and I regret that I could not document that fact. There are a couple of records described in this discography on which a band deliberately imitates the style of other famous bands. If a band could do that, so could a trumpet player or a pianist.

Alternate Versions of Recordings

Alternate versions and transcribed versions of recordings are identified. Quite a few performers made more than one recording of a selection, and Victor frequently listed both, or many, of the different takes. Collectors would probably want to hear the alternate versions, and one of them might be a rare find because it was deleted and replaced when an error was detected. Transcriptions became epidemic in the 1930s.

Engineers had become skilled at transforming original recordings into something more commercially acceptable. Some records were "noisy" in spots and that noise could be reduced in a transcribed version. In the case of imported recordings, Victor allegedly issued transcribed versions of HMV recordings because the grooves were shaped differently than those on domestic records, a fault that caused early wear on the fragile shellac records. I tried to identify transcribed recordings because I know that serious collectors would rather not have them in their collections.

Record companies routinely embossed data in the space between the end of the grooved area and their labels. Victor placed take numbers at the 9 o'clock position next to the label and these are easily read. They are always expressed as numerals. If the take has an R or an S or the symbol S/8 at that position, the record is not an original pressing. Recordings made in Europe usually have the entire HMV matrix number pressed in the space either above or below the label, and those with a T1 suffix are transcribed versions.

There was another form of alternate recording that deserves mention. Victor frequently employed two recording machines during recording sessions. The takes were listed as 1 and 1A (or 2 and 2A, etc.). In some cases recordings from both machines were released. It is important to note that 1 and 1A are identical in all respects because both recording machines were attached to wires from a single microphone.

Various Victor Series

Victor assigned blocks of numbers for specific purposes. Classical records by world-famous performers had red labels, semi-classical records had blue labels, popular records had black labels, etc. The catalog numbers for any label type ranged from one to five digits until approximately 1942, at which point the company devised hyphenated catalog numbers that they used until the end of the 78rpm era. Some of the records in the 25000 to 27999 series were renumbered and reissued in the 20-2000 series or on the Bluebird or Montgomery Ward budget labels.

The black label numbers from 16000 to 22000 and from 24000 to 27999 were actually all one continuous series. (The 23000 Series was used for "Race" and "Hillbilly" records.) For discographical purposes, I have broken each series into a manageable sequence of numbers. For example, in this introductory online discography I have listed the 25000 Series, the 26000 Series, and the 27000 Series separately, even though the entire range was governed by the same standards by the Victor Company. Each of those blocks of numbers contains up to 2000 recordings. On a good day I can only describe about ten recordings an hour, so I had to establish reasonable goals for myself to ensure my sanity.

Features of the Discography

Most of the features of the discography are obvious. Titles, lists of performers, recording locations, matrix numbers, and recording dates are familiar to most collectors. I included release dates in parentheses next to the recording dates. Unfortunately, the company stopped listing deletion dates in their files so I cannot assure anybody that any record was available for more than three months. Victor had rules governing the number of copies that had to be sold if a record was retained in their catalog. From artist's contracts we know that the number was relatively small, and a record could be deleted if less than 50 or 75 copies were sold in a three-month period.

There are data that purport to indicate how many copies of each record were actually sold. Those statistics are handwritten on the reverse side of many of the blue history cards. The numbers are of limited utility, however, because they were prepared in response to a court case that was being litigated. Many of those records remained in Victor catalogs for another 20 years after the case was resolved, with more records presumably being sold

Many of the records were reissued with other Victor catalog numbers, or they were released in Europe by HMV. Alan Kelly, John Milmo, and I tried to identify the international releases, and I'm sure that we missed quite a few. It is also true that many of the recordings were later reissued on other formats. I never list LPs, CDs, 45s, eight-tracks, or the like because so many of them have been altered by engineers. Playing an original 78rpm record at the right speed—with a proper stylus—is a skill worth learning.

Historical Perspectives

Although a few of the recordings in the 25000 through 27000 series were made in the 1920s, the vast majority were made during the worst economic depression in American history. The artists were usually limited to one take of each song that they recorded. Record sales were disappointing. Radios and free broadcasts replaced Victrolas as centers of home entertainment. Fortunately, motion pictures were no longer silent, and there was a huge demand for songs to be used in Hollywood musicals. As the decade progressed, big bands made recordings of songs that have become popular classics and a new style of singing called "crooning" became the most romantic form of performing a song.

In its early years the Victor Company all but ignored non-white performers, jazz, and Latin American music, but by the middle of the 1930s they had many of the most legendary black and Latin artists under contract. It is noteworthy and fortunate that a huge number of the recordings in this discography are now available online.

I paused and listened to some records every time I realized that I was looking at an album that was dedicated to the memory of a deceased artist, usually a man who had died at a very young age. Three of those albums caused me to become familiar with the lives and music of Bix Beiderbecke, Hal Kemp, and especially Russ Columbo. I highly recommend almost any Russ Columbo record. If you've never heard one, you are in for a treat, and if you read in his biography the story about the news of his death at age 26 being kept from his mother for the 10 years before her passing (out of concern for her health), it will tear at your heartstrings. A great deal of work goes into compiling these discographies, and some of it stirs one's emotions.

Some of the research results in intriguing mysteries. A note on one of the blue history cards advises employees not to divulge the matrix numbers for the records made on March 28, 1940. It is an ominous warning. I have come up with three possible explanations, but I won't share any of them because I refuse to engage in speculation. I did, however, list those matrix numbers.

Acknowledgments

The raw data for the Victor recordings listed here are archived in New York City and I was fortunate to have the cooperation of Mike Panico, Vince Giordano, and Tom Tierney each time I visited the Sony Archives. Mike and Vince were especially helpful when they responded to my need for something quickly.

The other major source of data can be found in London, and I was fortunate to have been a friend and collaborator with the highly prolific HMV discographer Alan Kelly. For almost fifteen years we attempted to identify records issued by the two companies. A gentleman named John Milmo inherited Kelly's data and has worked tirelessly to expand upon Kelly's work. He has been every bit as helpful and generous as the late Dr. Kelly.

An early draft of the discography was sent to David Seubert and Sam Brylawski, the director and manager of the Discography of American Historical Recordings project. They distributed one of my spreadsheets to five researchers who examined each item, made comments or corrections, and then flagged items in their database for my attention. I don't know how Fran Smith, Lynn Jurgensen, Katy Costantinidis, Dain Lopez, or Nadine Turner felt about cleaning up my work, but I am grateful for every minute that they devoted to the task and by the quality of their research. Thank you very much, ladies and gentlemen, you have provided me with a humbling but rewarding experience. Sam Brylawski also did a great job of editing and then engaging me in discussions about problems that needed to be addressed. Finally, David Seubert made editorial and cosmetic improvements and got this discography up and running. Nice work, everybody!

I mentioned Allan Sutton briefly at the beginning of this document. The quality of his work speaks for itself. As an award-winning publisher and discographer, he has no equal. People don't buy very many books any more so he recently decided to retire rather than face a financial disaster. It is a shame. His books are of the highest quality. Best of all, he is an honorable man and a good friend. A couple of the titles we worked on are now listed for sale for between $880 and $1000 apiece, and neither one of us has an extra copy of either one. Some of my other volumes are still available on the Mainspring Press website and I advise speculators to consider the investment opportunities.
